

Tabula Rasa Issue 38 (March 2021) Tabula Rasa* Special Issue

Debates on Coloniality and Decolonial Feminisms in the Global Souths

Guest Editors

Karina Ochoa Muñoz

Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, Azcapotzalco, Mexico

karina.otxo@gmail.com

Breny Mendoza

California State University, Northridge, USA

breny.mendoza@csun.edu

This thematic issue of Tabula Rasa aims at presenting the scholarly diversity around the issue of the colonial and decoloniality seen all around the world. In Latin America, the decolonial debate has been so far focused in the European colonial expansion. This issue intends to extend the decolonial canon by bringing in new women's voices and colonial experiences occurring in the Western imperial landscape and beyond. Thus, this issue will gather a set of papers making visible the varied colonial expansionisms in order to open a dialogue that helps us to identify divergences, parallels, and points of intersection between European colonialism and other empires worldwide. By doing this, we will widen the scope of colonial analysis, in order to significantly enhance our current understanding of the colonial world. Likewise, we will bring in the voices of decolonial feminisms and their contributions to this debate.

Manuscripts in the form of articles that are the result of theoretical or field research, not previously published in the same or a different language or another format, can be submitted for consideration. Each submission shall have an average length of 20 to 25 sheets and be formatted in (8.5 x 11 in.) letter size paper, 12-point Arial Font, double spaced (including the references).

Proposals can be presented in English, Portuguese, French, or Spanish languages. Manuscripts shall be original, unpublished contributions, prepared in compliance with Tabula Rasa guidelines: See <http://www.revistatabularasa.org/normas/>

Deadline for Manuscript Receipt: July 31st, 2020.

For further information on the format or submitting proposals, please contact:

Karina Ochoa Muñoz

karina.otxo@gmail.com

Breny Mendoza

breny.mendoza@csun.edu